Raising Girls Why Are Different

The bottom line is that raising boys versus girls is different. However, as time goes on the differences lie in how they are raised more than the actual physiological differences between the two. Both sexes seem to take turns being 'more difficult' for parents based on the stage of development they are encountering.

Certainly, there are issues that arise solely with each gender that parents raise. But raising daughters out of fear and curtailing their world around fears and dated beliefs that girls need to be protected all the time is a waste of time. And it is an unhealthy way for parents to raise their daughter.

Talking Equality When Raising Sons and Daughters

A boy's brain really is different from a girl's, which means our methods for parenting a son will be much more effective if we'll adjust accordingly. For example, Dr. Jantz says most boys thrive when they're allowed to move around more frequently while they're doing activities that require a lot of concentration and focus.

Defining the Gender Double Standard. We focus on the gender double standard in attitudes toward courtship and family formation behavior. A double standard “implies that two things which are the same are measured by different standards” (Eichler 1980:15). Thus a gender double standard suggests that we evaluate the same behavior of men and women differently; what is acceptable or appropriate ...
